

Sometimes, I have to wait...

Going to local businesses is one way to find out if they are hiring. Since I am going to a workplace, the employees there are probably busy working. This means they may be helping a customer in the store or speaking with someone on the phone. If there are lots of customers, there may even be a line.

When the employee is busy talking to someone else, I need to wait until they are not busy. It is rude if I interrupt them when they are talking to someone else. If there is a line, I need to get in line and wait. Waiting means that I should stand quietly and look down at my phone or at other things nearby.

If the employee is not talking to someone else, and if there is not a line that I have to wait in, I can walk over to them, and say, "Excuse me, can I ask you a question?"

If I wait patiently until the employee is ready to talk to me, the employee will think I am polite, and that could help me get a job!
