

Here are examples of how teamwork might happen within different jobs:

Job:	What is their shared goal?	How do they work together?
Computer Repair Workers	To repair a damaged computer.	Two people work together to figure out what is wrong with a computer.
Construction Workers	To build a well-made, safe bridge.	A construction crew works together to carry and assemble materials.
Cook, Waiter, Bus Boy in a restaurant	To make sure that the customers enjoy their meals.	A cook makes the food, a waiter serves the food to the customers, and a bus boy cleans the tables.
Custodians	To clean each office in the building.	One custodian mops the floor, while the other cleans the windows. They take turns doing jobs so the same person does not always have to complete a less-preferred task.
House Painters	To paint the entire house.	Each painter paints a different part of the room or house.
Mechanics	To repair the damaged engine.	Two mechanics work on a car engine to figure out what is wrong.
Pharmacy Technicians	To help the pharmacist prepare correct medications for customers.	They take turns counting tablets, labeling bottles, answering phones, or stocking shelves.
Production Line Workers	To assemble or make a product.	Each person in the line completes their task, and then passes the product on to the next person.
College Professors	To publish their paper in a journal.	A professor writes a research paper with several colleagues.
Teachers	To support and educate students in the school.	Teachers plan lessons together and they share information about students.
Video Game Designers	To produce a video game that can be marketed and sold.	Designers work together to agree on a game idea. They work together to create content for the video game.
